On the fourteenth of jenuary 1839, the Third Congress of the Reguldie of Texas passed an act requiring five commissioners to select a location for the Capital of the Republic at some point "above the San Antonio and Na-cogdoches road, and between the rivers Colorado and Trinidad." The congress cogdoches road, and between the rivers Colorado and Trinidad." The congress also required the commissioners to set apert grounds at the Capital "Most Eligible for a University." Thus Austin was made the permanent seat of government, and forty acres of land half a mile north of the Capitol Building was was set aside and dedicated on the Map as the place for the University of Texas. Westward one mile distant rise the monntains of the Colorado, whilst from the lofty eminence of University Hill a hundred feet higher than the Capitol, the vision ranges for thirty miles in every direction over a rich and lovely landscape.

Indeespe.

The spot thus relected for a University by Lamar, Burnet, Rusk and their compatriots, has, from the date of its dedication, been proudly pointed to by those who made Texas, as the site of the future University.

The people will be called on in September next to vote at a special election for the lecation of the University, and we respectfully submit the following reasons for its location at Austin:

1. The State owns a commanding and lovely site at Austin, dedicated fortwo years ago for University purposes
2. The healthfulness of Austin is

2. The healthfulness of Austin is unsurpassed, its mortuary report showing the smallest death rate of any city in the South or Southwest.

3. The proximity of marble, granite and hard limestone to Austin, will enable the state to creet there as University Building with as little if not less expense than at any other point.

4. The youth if Texas, while being educated at Austin, could observe the practical administration of of actual government—Legishtive, Executive and

There is great complaint in this vicin trial.

Mr. James Pyle of New York has set samples of PEARLINE for distriction. Some farmers have had as high sent sample of Bastrop lignite coal. He stated he was about to write up the article for the Houston Post, It has the package.

Last week Mr. Brown, recently from Cuba, presented his friend- with a trop ical fruit called memy, a beautiful oval shaped nut, brown color, something like a coconnut. The pulp is of a rich chocolate color, enclosing a polished looking seed, oval shaped, with a hard shell. This fruit grows on trees and weights about two pounds. It tastes very much like our Yankee pumpkin, cooked and sweetened.

Gur arat stop was at the wood yard, where the irou-horse tarried for a fresh supply of todder. A little way out on the road one wees immense fields of potatoes in bloom. This looks encouraging for a hungry vegetarian. Hundreds of acres might well be devoted to this production. The corn is growing upleadedly, but so are the weeds, and indiging from appearances, it is difficult to say whether the farmers or the grase will puryail; a few more days, however, of dry weather will set things to rights.

We saw, beyond Tsylor, a sight not unusual in Texas, still new to us; on the left of the track were great flocks of sheep, and on the right were King's "estile on a thousand hills," or rather, a thousand cattle on a hill. There were about 3 000 cattle in a drove. We saw some magnificent farms in Tsylor county; the Silles Brothers have 4,000 acres of land, 300 of which are under cultivation. They have durable barns, heavy crops, wide pastures and herds of stock. Took a peep at Thorndale, which has five houses and an artesian well, for stockmen. There are several still remaining stations one meets between Taylor and Palestine. Marquez, as a friendly punster says, is a Mark to all surrounding towns. It is in oak openings. Jewett is the largest place between Palestine, and Hearne, absorbing trade from the inner country. Buffalo has eight or ten stores, 200 to 300 mhabitants and commands a large trade from Centerville and Fairfield. Oakwoods has twelve stores, and is a growing, healthy village.
